A Beautiful Balance

Aga Sokolow designs thoughtful, graceful, but intelligently and rigorously built Delaware beach homes that enable generations of family memories

Born and raised in Poland, Aga Sokolow, AIA, NCARB, couldn't help but absorb the power of beautiful architecture. "Growing up in a country that's over a thousand years old, I understood and appreciated the built environment even if I didn't have the words to articulate it," Sokolow recalls.

Coming to America at 19 years old, she studied illustration and design before earning a degree in architecture from Drexel University. Today, her boutique Wilmington-based architecture firm, Sokolow Architects LLC, is known for its broad expertise in designing and renovating coastal homes, even on the quirkiest sites.

"Any coastal design is guided by rules and restrictions," says Sokolow, "and that's for good reason! Along with making stunning spaces where people can create memories, my team and I are charged with the safety and wellness of the dwellers. Beauty and compliance can coexist; one doesn't exclude the other."

From a deep understanding of wave action and high-hazard flood zones to expertise in the latest flood-resistant design and breakaway systems, the firm crafts timeless homes in which the interplay of light, flow, and space belies the strength beneath. From floor-to-ceiling windows and multi-tiered rooftop decks, families look to the horizon and beyond.

"Our boutique size is intentional; we take on just a few select projects per year so that we can devote our full attention to each one. We are always listening, never pushing our own aesthetic, and are always inspired by what sparks joy in our clients."
